Feng Shui

Using mirrors strategically in the home

By Michele Duffy

Mirrors over fireplaces correct a long list of challenging Feng Shui.

Photos provided

Mirrors are symbolic of the water element, which governs the winter season including November, December and January and they are the one Feng Shui tool you can instantly benefit from when placing them correctly throughout your home. The shape of the mirror – a round mirror for Metal, a rectangular mirror for Wood, and a square mirror for Earth – comes into play and mirror placement per the BAGUA map is important, but the most important aspect is incorporating mirrors in the following ways to enhance your space and welcome positive energy into your home.

First, let's begin in the foyer. There are lots of conflicting Feng Shui ideas in terms of placing the mirror opposite the door, which reflects all the positive chi back out, however I have also seen many small dark foyers and the placement here can open the space and make it seem much bigger, thus overriding other concerns.
