

Rainfall Update—A Cloudy Picture

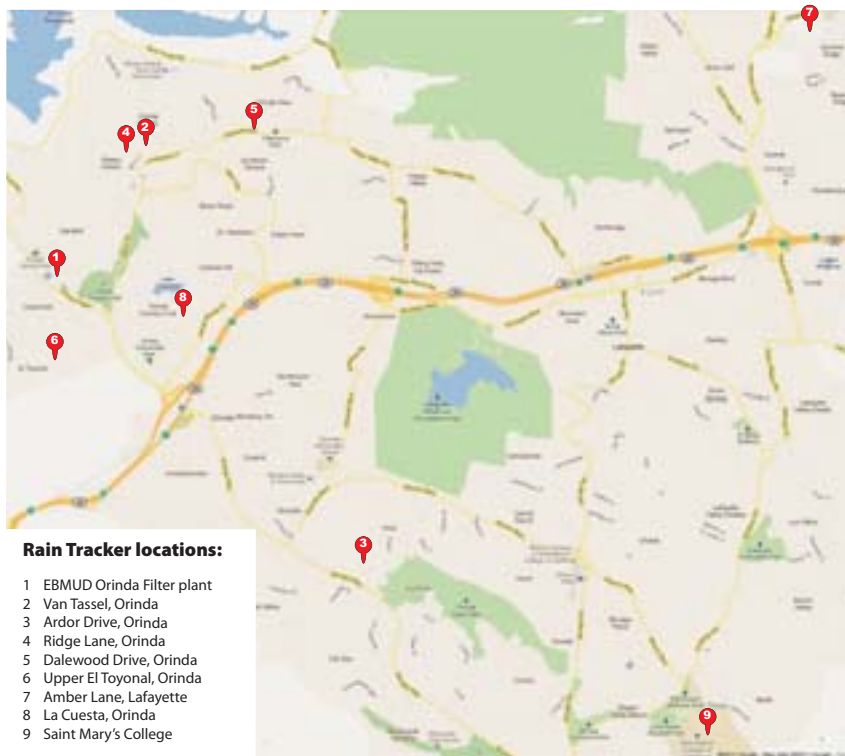

By Andrea A. Firth

When the Lamorinda Weekly ran a story about three Orinda residents who have been meticulously tracking the area rainfall patterns over the past thirty years, we knew there were more local rain trackers out there—and we were thrilled to hear from some of you. So we have updated the annual rainfall chart with a few more lines of data and expanded it to reflect locations throughout Lamorinda. [see chart] We received rainfall data from two additional locations in Orinda, one in the Orinda Downs neighborhood on Dalewood Drive and one on Upper Toyonal, plus a location in Lafayette on Amber Drive. And so Moraga was not left unrepresented, we added the data from a gauge that Contra Costa County maintains at Saint Mary's College.

Looks like a jumble of lines, right? That's what we thought. The rainfall data from the various sites tend to track similarly, but there is definitely some variability. One might conclude that these data confirm that rainfall, even over a relatively small area, is quite uneven. [see map]

But Orinda resident Gene Gottfried, who has been tracking rainfall on upper El Toyonal since 1985, pointed out that it might be the gauge that's at play. Gottfried, a physician and formerly a clinical laboratory director, used a glass rain gauge until 2007—a gauge, he points out, that was uncalibrated.

Top 4 Opportunities in 2011

- 1) Buy foreclosures in select neighborhoods and cities in Contra Costa County, for strong rental income returns, with future appreciation.
- 2) Buy a home in Lafayette, Moraga, or Orinda, in a rare buyer's market.
- 3) Sell in the under $1,000,000 range in Lamorinda, where sales are now improving, and move up to your dream house in a higher price range where the best negotiating opportunities exist.
- 4) Downsize, and sell in Lamorinda, where the market has not dropped as much, then buy a great one-story home at a bargain price in a nice neighborhood where homes have dropped more. Keep a low property tax by transferring it to the new house within Contra Costa County.
