AD Architects Inc. Plans for the in-fill community call for three duplexes with "thoughtful layouts" to maximize privacy and a smaller scale so as to not overwhelm the neighborhood.

The project has shrunk significantly from the original three-story, 11-condominium project that was not popular with neighbors, to the more residential cottage units, with perhaps the first "woonerf" in town - a Dutch term for a central shared living street, designed for pedestrians and cyclists and a social space where residents can meet and kids can play.
